

Enzymatic Stabilization and Functionalization of Natural Plant Pigment as Cosmetic Materials

Kohji Ishihara

Department of Life Science, Okayama University of Science

Arbutin was acylated with aromatic acids and related compounds to the corresponding acylated forms by a lipase-catalyzed transesterification. As the results, further stabilization and functionalization of natural bioactive compounds as cosmetic materials have been achieved by the enzymatic-modification method.